

Stories are everywhere -

they exist in all cultures and in all arenas of human activity.

We learn them at our mother's knee, use them to account for our actions and to encode those things that matter.

Stories of heroism, greed, bravery and betrayal: through the telling of tales we define who we are in conversation with others. Conversations that are based around stories may help to bridge between groups of people by providing some structures for the conveying of ideas with the values that are behind them.

They may empower people to define about possible futures that make sense.
